BRILLIANT CHURCH SCENE Other June Weddings of Interest - Hos tesses and Guests - At the Children's

Miss Condit Smith and Mr. Cyrus Field Judson had a beautiful day for their wedding. The Church of the Epiphany was crowded to the on both sides of the chancel and about the grill, and the whole effect was very pretty when the bridal party was grouped there. Rev. Dr. McKim performed the ceremony, which was attended by the choral service, sung by the boys from St. John's Church under the direction of Mr. Daniels. The choristers went down the aisle to meet the bride and her train of attendants. As they walked in procession, the beautiful music of "The Voice That Breathed O'er Eden" filled the church with melody. Up the aisle again they preceded the bridal party to the chancel. During the service they sang "O Happy Love," and again, as the wedded couple left the church, an anthem to the music of Lohengrin.

first floor the sale of refreshments made the rooms an animated place. At the supper table Miss Casey, Miss McComb, Miss Emory and Miss McKim, was in charge, and 1ce cream and cake were served by Miss Mazie Eastman, Miss Campbell and Miss Bryan. Sister Jane Francis of St. Margaret's, Boston, will arrive today to take charge of the home, which will be ready for its occupants on the 15th instant. Last summer 150 poor children were received and each enjoyed a two weeks' outing. The same number will be provided for this summer.

The Rev. N. Patch of Washington acted as moderator of the meeting being announced Mr. W. H. Dougal, who acted as clerk, and the Rev. Mr. Patch were instructed to notify the Rev. Mr. Alexander of his election and request that he take charge as soon as possible. It is not positively known that Mr. Alexander will accept ance is very probable. Another part of our food might also be usefully investigated; that is, vinegar. The different varieties of "fire water" on the market sold under that name are appalling. I know good, honest, square vinegar made out of wine or "sich," but it would take an adept in chemistry to detect the various compounds in use by the different brands of "diluted acetic acid." Some of these vinegars carry off an ink stain like oxalic acid. Others have a fiery taste that peels off the lining of one's throat, and it dawns on one that it may be a concentrated essence of "craythur" or "crater." Compared to the liquid in which first-class pickles are sold they represent the strength of alcohol in respect to water. Some have a whitening effect on metal like nitric or sulphuric acid; others stain it black. Their scouring properties and polishing qualities involuntarily suggest ammonia and concentrated lye; also their color varies from dark brown to white. Dear Star, after swallowing annato for milk, what on earth are we taking in guise of vinegar?

They are angry with their situation without exactly knowing why—so angry that it is said the social democrat vote may be doubled, and they may, in spite of urgent appeals, send up another hostile majority just as a protest. The peasantry, in particular, are angry at the prices of their produce and demand more protection, while the artisans are embittered by those very prices, which they ascribe not to protection but to "taxes" generally. Social democratic ideas, moreover, have spread among thousands who do not belong to that party or intend to belong to it, but who think that if the government were more nearly in their hands they could make their burdens less. as regards the immediate question at issue there are two ideas at work of which we do not accurately estimate the force. One is a strong disbelief in the imminence of danger. The specter of invasion has harassed the present generation of mature Germans for twenty-two years; they have grown accustomed to it and they have ceased, in a measure, to regard it with horror. They half think it will never be embodied and are unwilling to make great sacrifices in order to avert a contingency which may never happen and which their emperor, even while preparing for it, admits he sees no reason immediately to expect. The other is a high degree of confidence in the army as it exists. The Germans know all about the last war and its victories; they know, also, that their army is far stronger than it was then; they do not quite realize the awful weight of the masses Russia could bring into the field, and they think they could defend themselves very well as they are.
